The Klondike Gold Rush was a migration by an estimated 100,000 prospectors to the Klondike region of the Yukon, in north-western Canada, between 1896 and 1899. Gold was discovered there by local miners on August 16, 1896; when news reached Seattle and San Francisco the following year, it triggered a stampede of prospectors. Some became wealthy, but the majority went in vain.

"I think it's a significant event, because the California Gold Rush was the decisive influence in bringing together the east with the newly acquired western extensions of the American empire, especially California," he says. "In other words, the Gold Rush didn't separate the nation by creating an east and a west.
