Cloudera came first with the certification program so most of the job application forms has it in their drop down and is very common among hadoop developers and admins . MAPR is the next common one with the M5 and M7 hbase and developer and admin certification. Hortonworks is also good but I haven't seen it more among hadoopers.

MapR today supports hybrid and multi-cloud environments with open APIs, letting you avoid cloud lock-in and continue to run legacy applications as is. Additionally, MapR helps you lower cloud costs by up to 30%. Containers — Neither Cloudera nor Hortonworks support containerized stateful applications. MapR is a leader and early adopter of both Docker and Kubernetes, and has made containerized stateful applications a reality.

Is Hortonworks or Cloudera Better for Hadoop Certification ...

MapR had very fast I/O throughput. The write speed was several times faster than what we could achieve with the other Hadoop vendors (Cloudera and Hortonworks). This is because MapR does not use HDFS, which is essentially a "meta filesystem". HDFS is built on top of the filesystem provided by the OS. MapR has their filesystem called MapR-FS, which is a true filesystem and accesses the raw disk drives. The MapR filesystem is very easy to integrate with other Linux filesystems.
