In a non-periodic sentence, we would normally write, "Always pleading at the heart's door, the lover waits patiently for the queen." The non-periodic sentence is clearer in English. It tends to follow the subject-verb-object pattern we are accustomed to. The periodic sentence is more exotic and arguably more poetic, but initially confusing.

When training away from your main gym and entering a new dojo, one would often say Onegaishimasu to greet everyone. This too gradually becomes Oss overtime. Nowadays, I think many Japanese have embraced it because of its popularity in the west (which is a bit odd) but, also makes it acceptable in most settings, especially with men.
