Men reported women's violence as

'inconsequential' which did not affect their wellbeing and safety; they rarely sought protection. Women tend to over-report their own violence, and men underestimate or define away their own (especially anything non-physical).

Rape is committed overwhelmingly by men and boys, usually against women and girls, and sometimes against other men and boys. (For the most part, this entry will assume male perpetrators and female victims.)

Virtually all feminists agree that rape is a grave wrong, one too often ignored, mischaracterized, and legitimized.
