It is therefore not surprising that Blade Runner has yielded an unusually high number of interpretive studies. The essays in Retrofitting Blade Runner, for example, touch on the film's evocation of technology, radical politics, film noir, "personhood," urban topography, the Doppelganger, detective fiction, and Miltonian epic. Methodologically, the essays encompass both content-based analyses of social and philosophical theme as well as more aesthetic, intertextual treatments of the ...

While relating Stiller's Hum to the mood of loneliness and despair evoked by the sound of emptiness and waste in the novel might overrule Stiller's interpretation, it nonetheless evidences one of the less obvious strengths of Retrofitting Blade Runner. The strong essays in the volume revitalize our own views of the novel and film even when we sometimes dispute their findings.
