The first of the two brutal events concerned is the stoning to death of the mother of a young girl: "they cut out her tongue first. Later came the rest. For the Imam ruled according to the laws of God's Shari'a." The second is the final assassination of the Imam. Though repetitive, the effect is haunting and often mesmerising.

The Fall of the Imam by Nawal El Saadawi | New Humanist

It is thrilling to read that in Arabic and remains truly liberating for me to envision this remarkable symbolic idea. Despite the fact that The Fall of the Imam primarily aimed at critiquing Sadat's neoliberal, patriarchal dystopia, Saadawi's imagining of the possibility of a female divine is a radical feminist achievement.
